Draft text

Would you like to change someone's world?

Autism therapists work with children, teens, and families living with autism spectrum disorders. They learn ABA to teach new skills, make new connections, and help turn challenging behavior around. ABA is the science of understanding behavior in order to change that behavior through specific interventions. Working with people with ASD is exciting, demanding, and rewarding!

How do I begin?

Therapists earn a national credential to become a Registered Behavior Technician to become qualified to work with families. You can do this on your own or through an ABA provider company that hires you.

Where can I find more information?
